Eli M. Knapp was of the speculative turn of mind the other day and bought a horse without the horse. He met a man who said he would sell a horse which he could not find for $25 and let Eli hunt him up. So Eli took him up and started on the hunt, but the next day the man found his horse and bought his late buyer out.

J. H. Overman has one of the best looking corn crops in this part of the country. The corn in many places is over the height of an ordinary man. Mr. Overman says that this is not any of your common corn but that he got it from a farmer who has the genuine Henry Field's corn. Mr. Overman has a good many spring shoots and takes great pride in making everything handy to care for them. He has a chute made under a bridge to get his pigs from the lot to the pasture.

A very queer thing happened the other night and it is certainly a brave deed. On Wednesday evening at a late hour some parties stole all of the cherries off the trees in front of Mrs. Margaret Wood's house. The trees were just loaded down with the red fruit and on Wednesday evening Miss Jenne picked about a quart saying she would pick them all the following morning, but when morning came some one had helped themselves to the fruit. This is the second case of this kind in the past two weeks. An example ought to be made of the culprits.

A dinner party was given at Dr. A. W. Montgomery's Saturday evening and in fact it was a sort of a reunion of old time friends. Those present were Dan Hinds and wife of Little Rock and H. R. ## A Bryan Echo.

Does Bryan fear to tread the path Which he himself has picked And meet the regnant G. O. P. To lick or to be licked?

Echo—be licked. Why does he hang on like a leach And work his well-worn bluff? Two times a loser in the race, Is not that quite enough?

Echo—enough. Observe the smile upon his face, Put there to meet the scoffs And scorn of genuine Democrats—The smile that won't come off.

Echo—come off. He says that he alone has strength To pull the party through, And any one opposing him To party is not true.

Echo—not true. Oh, hear him speak upon the stump, His accents rising high: "Behold in me the people's own, I am Vox Populi!"

Echo—ull. "I want to run, I ought to run, Because, dear friends, you see, It's nothing more than right and what The delegates owe me."

Echo—oh, me. With Bryan at the front once more, The Matchless Leader brave— Say, will the party follow him To glory or the grave?

Echo—the
